It's been brewing for quite awhile now, can the US of A compete with the world? The rest of the world grew-up playing "football", while the US was infatuated with the more violent version. It's only been since the mid seventies that America started moving into the arena of "The Beautiful Game." It was around that time that Pele of Brazil was recruited to play for the Cosmos and attendance hit a peak of 70,000 fans.

This Wednesday and Thursday, the slac green will be turned into its humble version of the world-cup. While we always enjoy the unique international camaraderie that is afforded us here at SLAC for this one two day tournament we've agreed to show our allegiance for this friendly game. Though it's just for fun, it should make for some interesting bragging rights.

Come and enjoy the competition, but be careful of errant flying balls and cheer for your favorite team. America will be in black and the rest of the world in white. No political statement implied.
